A SINGULAR DUEL.

Major Buford, called, by way of eminence, "the Major," was the most noted duelist of the day. A dead shot, a perfect master of fence, and in his enemies, utterly relentless, his name had become a terror to all who knew him.
In the midst of a knot of admiring friends, one day, the Major was discussing his "last affair," and complacently explaining how it came that he mortally wounded his adversary instead of killing him on the spot, when one of two gentlemen standing within hearing suddenly advanced and struck him in the face. The spectators stood aghast. What could have tempted the stranger to rush thus madly on his late foe? He was an old man. Already, to appearance, had three-score and ten years passed over his head. He must, indeed have been weary of life, whose brief remnant he was ready to cast away so recklessly.

The Major was astonished. The very audacity of the act struck him with amazement. "Is the provocation sufficient, or must I repeat it?" inquired his assailant.
The Major's first impulse was to return blow for blow. But fierce and violent as were his passions, he had schooled himself to complete mastery over them; and a moment's reflection told him how bootless, under the circumstances, would be the indulgence of his anger. He had received would admit of but one reparation, and that he determined to lose no time in seeking.

"The insult is sufficient," he answered, with forced calmness. "Oblige me by naming a friend for your own I care not—to whom may I refer one of my own?"
"This gentleman," replied the other, resuming the arm of his companion, "will return here in an hour, to confer with any one you may designate."

And the two strangers took their leave together.
At sunrise, on the following morning the principals and their seconds made their appearance on the ground selected. No one else was present—not even a surgeon. The Major, in his own experience, never had needed one; and his opponent, it was plain was careless of the consequence.

There was no necessity of delay. The preliminaries had been settled. The parties were to fight with pistols, at ten paces, the combat to continue until one or both had fallen. One condition had been insisted on by the stranger, which called an indignant blush to the Major's cheek, as it seemed to imply an imputation upon his honor, though he submitted to it with the best grace he could. It was, that before placing the combatants, the bodies of both should be inspected, to see that no secret protective device was employed by either.

The ground was measured and the men placed. There was a marked contrast between the two in more respects than that of years. The old man, erect and motionless as a statue, his whitened locks floating on the breeze, never once looked at his antagonist, though his side was turned. His face was stern and determined, but had nothing malignant in it. The Major, on the other hand, glared fiercely at his foe, seeming even to grudge him the few moments of life yet eeked out to him.

"Were he my father I would kill him!" he answered, audibly, to some whispered expostulations of his second, who was evidently touched by the old man's venerable appearance.

The pistols were put in the hands of the principals, and the giving of the word was explained.

"Gentlemen, are you ready?"
"Ready," both answered.

Still the old man moved not, nor did he direct a single glance at his adversary. His eyes were fixed in front of him, as if he were of that stolid, unfeeling breed, who, in the direction of the point, still the same appearance of eager listening.

The Major was in no hurry. He could afford to take his time with a man who held his pistol at random, without looking whitherward. He took deliberate aim. He was determined to make sure work. If his ball missed his adversary's heart, even a fraction of an inch, he would never make any pretension to skill again.

The sharp report of the stranger's pistol was followed by a convulsive jerk of the Major's arm, causing the discharge of his weapon far wide of its mark, while he, staggering a few paces backward, fell heavily to the ground.

"Conduct me to him," said the old man to his friend.

The latter took his principal's arm, and led him to the prostrate form of the Major, whose second, kneeling by his side, had torn open his garment, exposing to view the fatal wound in his breast, made by the stranger's bullet.

"Is your friend seriously hurt?" inquired the latter coolly.

"You can see for yourself, sir," the second answered.

"There you're in error," replied the other; "I am totally blind."

The wounded man, who had by this time revived a little, and his second, looked at the stranger in astonishment. There was no visible defect in his organs of vision, but there was a fixity of look—that "beaming of the eyes on vacancy"—which so unmistakably evinces the absence of sight.

"Who are you? and what was your motive in seeking this encounter?" the Major faintly murmured.

"First, are you in a condition to renew it?" inquired the stranger.

"When I have told you who I am," the stranger resumed, "you will scarce require motive for what I have done. No wonder you have forgotten James Merton," he continued, "for he is greatly changed, no doubt."

The dying man started, and groaned bitterly.

"But I have never forgotten you, Richard Buford, nor the injuries you have done me. A cherished daughter, the pride of my eyes, and the joy of her mother's heart, you enticed from her home, deceived by a sham marriage, and then abandoned her to die of a broken heart. My son, and only remaining child, in a rash attempt to avenge his sister's wrongs, fell a victim to your accursed skill. You even robbed him of the ordinary chances of combat, unequal as they would have been, by encasing your cowardly body in concealed armor. The loss of both our children unsettled my wife's reason, and she died in a mad-house. Could I have found you then I would have given you no chance for your life; but, valiant as you have always professed to be, and coward as you are, you feared and evaded me. Yet I knew we should one day meet, and I registered a vow that when we did, I would offer you a sacrifice to your own infernal art. To this end I studied to become an adept in it, and succeeded. And when, at length, blindness cast its shadow upon me, and seemed to render hopeless the fulfillment of my vow, instead of abandoning it, I betook myself to a new species of practice. I sought to make hearing take the place of sight. Again I succeeded. I learned to take aim with ear instead of the eye. When I heard you answer 'ready,' to-day, I knew the exact direction in which to point my pistol, as well as if I had seen you. Besides, I could hear you breathing where you stood. You lost your chance in delaying your fire. You wished to make sure work, and overreached yourself."

More than once the Major looked appealingly at the speaker's face; but in those remorseless, sightless eyes there was no sympathy. And as the labored breathing grew fainter, the old man resumed his listening attitude. At last all was very still.

"He is dead!" he said; and his wonted expression of sober melancholy settled on the old man's face, as, taking his companion's arm, he turned and walked leisurely away.

"Are the jury agreed?" asked a judge of a court-attache, who met on the stairs with a bucket in his hand. "Yes," replied Patrick, "they have agreed to send out for half a gallon."

THE TRI-WEEKLY YEOMAN

THURSDAY AUGUST 17, 1871.

KILLING AT BAGDAD.—On Tuesday morning, about nine o'clock, Addison Cook was shot and instantly killed by Hiram Bohannon, in a cut near Bagdad. The report of the gun was heard, and when Bohannon was asked the cause of the firing he replied, "I have killed that dam thief." Cook was a desperate character, and a feud of long standing had existed between him and Bohannon. No one but the principals witnessed the tragedy, and the particulars are unknown. Bohannon fled to Jacksonville, four miles north of Bagdad, and, we understand, had an examining trial yesterday.

A Book Lost.—Some six months ago I loaned you a book, "Health by Good Living." Will you please leave it with Mr. Nelson Alley, Market street, and greatly oblige, G. M. H.

The "Blue Grass Temperance Convention" convened in the Senate Chamber on Tuesday, the 15th. There are about one hundred delegates in attendance from the various Lodges. J. J. Hickman, G. W. C. T., is President, and Geo. L. Gault Secretary. The session being purely of a business character, the convention sets with closed doors, and we can give no extended report of the proceedings. J. J. Hickman, G. W. C. T., delivered a very eloquent and interesting lecture, on Tuesday night, in the Presbyterian Church, and our young friend, J. Henry Powell, followed last night in one of his happiest efforts. A goodly number were initiated into "Capital Lodge" after each lecture. The Good Templars keep things quite lively around the Capitol day and night. We understand the convention is likely to remain in session a day or two longer. The following is a list of the officers elected for the next session, which meets in Maysville, February, 1872:

Geo. A. Lewis, Pres., Frankfort.
Miss Sallie Pool, V. P., Winchester.
Ed. Patton, Sec., Paris.
L. J. Lawler, F. S., Winchester.
J. W. Martin, Treas., Winchester.
Frank Dillon, Marshall, Lexington.
Miss Alice Austin, D. M., Lexington.
Miss Sue Fox, R. H. S., Lexington.
Miss Nellie Steadman, L. U. S., Franklin county.
J. A. Hodges, I. G., Frankfort.
J. H. Prather, O. G., Lexington.
J. H. Young, Chaplain, Franklin county.
J. J. Parsley, Past President, Childsburg.

Our city has been enlivened in the past few days by two church weddings, which were both largely attended by the friends of the happy parties. On Tuesday, at 2 o'clock, Mr. W. Stapleton Johnson was married to Miss Kate Connelly, at the Methodist Church, by Rev. J. T. Dodd—the church being darkened, and lit with gas. On yesterday, Dr. E. V. Deuell, of Little Rock, married to the altar, at Ascension Church, Miss Mary Cunningham, also of Arkansas, visiting her relatives in this city, the ceremony being performed by Rev. L. C. Lance, Rector of the church. Both parties took the afternoon train shortly after the conclusion of the ceremony. While congratulating all of them on the happy consummation of their hopes, we give a special greeting to our friend, Staps Johnson, hoping that he will find in his bride a pleasant recreation from his less poetical clerical duties in the Yeoman office.

Hor To-Night.—The hop to be given by the young men of Frankfort at the Capital Hotel this evening will be a pleasant entertainment. All the necessary committees have been appointed, and everything will be conducted in an unexceptionable manner. There are a number of handsome and interesting young ladies visiting the city, and their presence, together with Frankfort's own lovely daughters, will attract the attention of all stony-hearted old bachelors.

The Louisville, Memphis, and New Orleans Railroad Company organized in Louisville on Tuesday, by the election of a board of directors, with Lytleton Cook, Esq., as president. The route contemplated for the road will take it by the mouth of Salt River, through Hardinsburg, in Breckinridge county, Hartford, Hopkinsville, Cadiz, and Murray, to Troy Station or Union City, connecting with the Paducah and Gulf and other Southern roads. A branch is also contemplated through Cloverport, Owensboro, and Morganfield to a point opposite Shawneetown, connecting with the Illinois system of roads. This will be a very important road, and will develop a country rich in agricultural and mineral wealth. The energetic men who have taken hold of the project give earnest that it will be pushed forward vigorously.

STRAY.—David Kirkpatrick has taken up as a stray a dark brown horse, which may be seen at Triplett & Gibson's livery stable, on Ann street. For a full description of the horse, see notice in another column of the Yeoman.

At a ball at White Sulphur Springs, a Kentucky belle represented "Arctic Moonlight" in a dress of full illusion skirts dotted with swansdown and oxydized glass, and luminous with silver bands and crescents, pine cones, pearls, etc.

The sixth annual meeting of the Kentucky State Sunday School Association will meet at the First Presbyterian Church, Lebanon, on Tuesday, August 22d. Ministers of the Gospel, Superintendents of Sabbath Schools, and delegates appointed by Sabbath Schools or Sabbath School Conventions, are especially invited to attend this meeting.

WOMAN'S RIGHTS.—Jennie C. Clifton made a speech in New York, in which she announced herself as a candidate for Congress on a woman's rights and larger platform. Her sister, the irrepressible Mrs. Victoria C. Woodhull, is a candidate for the Presidency on the free-love "departure."

SCOTT FAIR.—The Scott county fair will begin next Thursday, and continue three days. The Georgetown cornet band will furnish the music.

The August term of the Fayette circuit court is in session.

How it is Done.—The Maysville Republican, in its list of murders, puts down that of Joseph E. Curry, of Powell county, twice, numbering it first as 126, and again as 133. It will be remembered that the negro murderer of Curry was protected from arrest by the U. S. military commander at Fitchburg. Number 132 is the case of Mrs. Grosse, of Louisville, whose death is alleged to have been caused by ill-treatment of her husband, yet this lying record is quoted by respectable radicals in and out of the State as a veracious exhibit of Democratic lawlessness.

DISASTERS.—On the evening of the 14th, while the pleasure steamer Chautauque, plying between Jamestown and Maysville, was taking in wood at the point about six miles from Maysville, on Lake Chautauque, her boiler exploded, precipitating thirty passengers on board into the lake, and killing five or six of them outright. Nearly all the rest were more or less seriously injured.

Three persons lost their lives by the burning of a liquor store in Jersey City on Monday morning.

A London dispatch of the 14th says: "A dreadful calamity has visited the small island of Fogolanda, in the Malay archipelago, about fifty miles northeast of the Island of Celebes. An outburst of the volcano of Ruwang was accompanied by convulsion of the sea, and a wave forty yards in height swept human beings, cattle, and horses from the island. The number of persons who perished is stated at 416."

A fire damp explosion on Monday morning at Pittston, Pa., by which seventeen men were buried alive in a mine.

A German in St. Louis, who had forged a check for $25, blew his brains out with a pistol yesterday.

Chicago, August 15.—Frank Helmbold, aged six years, was drowned in the Chicago river this morning.

At Elgin, Illinois, last night, Mrs. J. B. Smith was burned to death by the explosion of a kerosene lamp. She was going down stairs, tripped and broke the lamp.

During a thunder-storm yesterday at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, a thunder-bolt entered the telegraph office, passed to the lower story and instantly killed a woman named A. E. Mitchell. When hit her hand on a gas-pipe.

The Trustees of the Louisville Medical College (Louisville, Ky.) have instituted one beneficiary scholarship for each Congressional District in the Southern and surrounding States. Any one wishing to take advantage of this benefaction, which is worth to each student at least $200, has only to write to Dr. E. S. Gailard, dean of the faculty of the Louisville Medical College, Louisville, Ky., when he will receive a college catalogue with full information in regard to all the necessary for him to do to secure one of these scholarships.

In accordance with the old Hippocratic oath, forbidding physicians to charge the families of each other for services rendered, the faculty of this College will make no charge for teaching sons of physicians, and, as no physician charges a clergyman's family, the sons of clergymen will receive the same privilege. The next College session begins October 2d, 1871.

RAILROAD MAPS.—We have for distribution a few copies of an excellent lithograph map, showing the route of the Frankfort, Paris, and Big Sandy Railroad. As it will shortly be brought before the people on a proposition to vote a county subscription, we shall be glad to furnish them to such as feel an interest in the enterprise.

SINGULAR COINCIDENCE.—The poll-books of the market-house precinct disclose the singular fact, that Willie Gilmore and Silas Bishop, though strangers to each other, voted together in the morning, both being almost simultaneously killed in the evening by balls which took effect near the same spot on their persons.

Lewis Obemeyer, the man who bought cattle of Stephen Langford and Samuel Shearer, of Madison county, a few weeks since, and gave leg-bail for pay, has been apprehended by the great detective, Clint Butts, and passed through Lexington Monday on his way to Richmond in charge of that officer.

General Patton Anderson has become associated with the practical planter, a monthly agricultural journal, published at Memphis, as managing editor. The planter is one of the most valuable periodicals for the Southern farmer and planter within our knowledge, is printed in superior style, and is furnished to subscribers at $150 per annum.

The results, says the Indianapolis Sentinel, of the elections in Kentucky and St. Louis are significant and hopeful. They present indubitable evidence that a revolution is going on in the public mind—that the people are not satisfied with the present conduct of public affairs and demand a change. And it will come.

The railroad trains on the new gauge are now running smoothly and on time. Each passenger train is supplied with an elegant new ladies' car, which is a great improvement on the old style, and excites universal admiration.

Our friend, Dr. J. M. Mills, who has been suffering for some time from a painful attack of sciatica, has gone to St. Catherine's, Canada, for his health. We hope he may find relief, and return fully restored.

Hon. Woodbury Davis, of Portland, Maine, died on Sunday, aged 53. He was early identified with the temperance reform and anti-slavery movements, and was one of the founders of the Republican party.

A party of gentlemen from Scott and Fayette counties left their homes on Thursday for Illinois to hunt grouse.

Attention is called to the advertisement of the grand gift concert, in another column.

Commendable Liberality.
St. Philip's Church.—We are pleased to see that the handsome and substantial improvements upon the lot of the above named church are now complete. This piece of workmanship is now an ornament to the town, and not only the congregation, but the public at large, owe a debt of gratitude to Mr. B. C. Trappan, at whose sole expense this much-needed work has been done. We are informed that the fences and side-walks and the grading of the grounds, etc., cost Mr. T. upwards of five hundred and fifty dollars.

Some open hearted and conscientious churchmen should at once come forward and liquidate the small debt that still rests upon the property, and thus remove the only remaining embarrassment under which the congregation labors.—Harrodsburg People.

The Democratic majority in Kentucky is now estimated at 40,000. Seymour's majority over Grant in 1868 was 11,323, while in the same year the Republican candidate for Governor received but 5,734 votes to his opponent's 114,412. The gain is a very handsome one.—Indianapolis News.

Yes, very handsome gain. If the radicals want to make another handsome gain next election, let them enfranchise the mules and get them to vote the Radical ticket. Louisville Ledger.

The Commercial, which has been claiming large R. Republican gains at the late election in Kentucky, now admits that the majority is 40,000 in 9,000 more than it was last year. It says in this connection: "The Republicans are in stronger for the Democracy than was expected." We have a suspicion that this same phenomenon will be exhibited in Ohio at our fall election.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

(From Coleman's Rural World)
ESSAY ON GRAPE GROWING.
 (Read before the Agricultural College of Mo., by
 S. C. Rogers, of Lathrop, Mo.)

Grape-growing in Missouri is rapidly increasing, and is destined to become one of the most important interests of the State. In grape-growing, the first thing to be considered is the propagation of the vine. This may be done in several ways; some of the most important are: First, from the seed. This mode is not desirable unless the grower wishes to obtain a better variety. In this case take fully ripened seed from the best varieties. Keep them during winter either in the pulp or in cool, moist sand. Prepare the ground in the fall by spading deep and throwing it into beds. The soil should be light and rich. In the spring, as soon as the ground is in order, thoroughly pulverize the surface of the seed-bed and sow the seed in rows, two feet apart, averaging an inch in a row. Cover them from one to two inches deep, varying with the amount of moisture in the soil. When they come up, partially protect them from the sun for the first few days. Supply them with small sticks to run upon to keep them out of the dust. During summer keep the ground well stirred and clear of weeds. If they appear weakly or diseased, pull them up, for the intention is to grow strong and healthy plants. In the fall, if it is not desirable to set them in the vineyard, they should be taken up and heeled in or covered in the bed to protect them from frost. These plants should be set in the vineyard and cultivated until they have fruited. Then the best varieties may be selected and propagated from cuttings, which is the second and most important method.

In propagating from cuttings, select in the fall medium sized and well ripened canes; cut them to two or four eyes, two eyes the best; tie them in bundles from fifty to a hundred each, box them in moist sand or sawdust and keep them in a cool moist place. In the spring, as soon as the ground will permit, put them out in suitable soil which has been thoroughly prepared for the purpose. Set them vertical and cover so that the upper bud will be level with the surface of the ground. They should be put in rows three feet apart and averaging two inches in a row. Cultivate well and in the fall treat them in the same manner as from the seed. This is the best and most common way of propagation; but some varieties do not grow well this way. Such varieties are generally propagated by layering. To layer a vine first shorten in its last year's growth to about one-half; second, prepare the ground by thoroughly pulverizing; then in the spring before the buds have opened make a trench one inch deep in which fasten the vine firmly to the bottom and at the same time cover with fine pulverized dirt. The canes generally take root at every joint; they should be supplied with small sticks to run upon and not allowed to grow too high. In the fall take them up, cut them apart and take care of them in the same manner as from the seed. There are other modes of propagation which are of great importance; but from the lack of space I cannot give a description of them here.

After raising the plant, the next thing in order is to select a proper location for the vineyard. The best locations in Missouri are, as a general thing, along our large water courses. The ground should be level to the sun, and possible be protected from the cold north and west winds. The soil should be a dry calcareous loam, draining itself readily. If the best natural locations cannot be obtained the deficiency should be made up, as much as possible, artificially. Experience is proving that those vast areas of rocky lands of south Missouri, which have so long been considered as worthless wastes, are well adapted to the growth of the grape. After the location has been selected comes the preparation of the soil. This is of great importance—if necessary the ground should be cleared of all trees, rocks, and stumps. Stir the ground by plowing and subsoiling to the depth of eighteen to twenty inches—though the sub-soil should not be thrown to the surface.

After the ground is prepared, what varieties should be planted? In a large State like ours, where the soil and climate differ so much, this is a difficult question. While one variety would do well another would make an entire failure. The safest plan is to select those varieties which have given the most general satisfaction. The following are a few which have given satisfaction in Missouri: 1st, the Concord; 2d, Norton's Va.; 3d, Rodgers' Hybrid No. 1; and 4th, the Delaware; all of which cannot be too highly recommended. Those, with many other varieties, should be tried by every grape-grower.

PLANTING THE VINE.
 The vines should be planted in rows from six to twelve feet apart—varying with the variety—strong growers requiring more space to allow the sun and air than slow growers. Select the best developed plants grown from cuttings or layers; lay off the ground with a line and put a peg wherever a plant is to be set; dig a hole eight or ten inches deep, and throw a small quantity of well pulverized soil in the bottom; put in the plant taking care to spread the roots; then fill in among the roots with well pulverized soil and pack gently. The upper bud should be left above the surface of the ground. The plant may be set either in the fall or spring; in the fall a small mound of earth should be raised around the plant to keep away the water and protect it from the winter. This mound should be removed in the spring as soon as the ground will permit. Spring planting is the best, other things being equal.

THE FIRST YEAR.
 The first year in the vineyard, cultivate well and keep clear of weeds; in the fall as soon as the leaves have dropped commence pruning by cutting the vines back to three eyes; after this is done cover them with a small mound of earth to protect them from the winter. Now comes the time to decide between training to stakes or trellis—both methods have been followed with success; but since the vine is spread more to the action of the sun and air on trellis this method is growing into popular favor; besides, in the long run, it is the cheapest. The trellis should be put up in the winter preceding the second year's growth. It should consist of durable posts set firmly in the ground with No. 10 wire stretched from one to the other. The first wire should be about twenty inches from the ground, the second eighteen above this, and the third eighteen above the second.

THE SECOND YEAR.
 In the spring of the second year as soon as the ground is in order take off the mound of earth and cultivate as in the first year. When the vines begin to grow go over them and rub off all the buds but two; always leave the best and never allow two canes to grow out from the same eye. Some do not rub off the third bud, but allow it to grow an inch or so and keep it pinched back to a spur for the purpose of growing bearing canes in the future. As the canes grow up tie them to the trellis, and when they have grown about four feet high, check them by pinching off the leader; but never disturb the laterals, for on these the fruit of the next season is to grow. In the fall, when it comes time for pruning, cut back the weakest of these two canes to three eyes to grow the young canes for the next year; cut the other main cane back to twelve or fifteen eyes. This will leave from four to eight laterals; cut them back to two or three eyes according to their size. This ends the second year.

THIRD YEAR.
 In the spring of the third year, as soon as the ground is in order, plow and hoe the vineyard, and when vegetation starts and the buds begin to open, go over the vines and rub off one of the buds from the spur, leaving the two best; train these as in the second year.
 Summer pruning or pinching in the bearing canes is one of the most important and delicate operations to be performed in grape culture; and in performing this operation the vine-dresser must keep his eyes open. When the young or bearing shoots have grown about six inches, pinch them off beyond the third bunch. Some pinch off leaving one-half beyond the third bunch; both methods should be tried as it is a disputed point. In a short time they will send out laterals; these should be pinched off beyond the first leaf. These pinchings may require the going over the vines two or three times. The object the summer pruning is to concentrate the sap as much as possible into the fruit. In the fall of the third year prune back to spurs the canes that have fruited and treat the two new canes in the same manner as in the second year.

THE FOURTH YEAR.
 In the fourth year we have two bearing canes; one two years old, the other one year old, besides a spur pruned to three eyes. The treatment during the spring and summer of the fourth year is the same as in the third; but in the fall the cane that has fruited twice must be cut away; the remaining canes are pruned in the same manner as in the fall of the third year. Ever afterwards the treatment is about the same as in the fourth year. Different varieties require different treatment, though the one given will answer for most varieties grown in Missouri.
